Mr. Chapman commented on the current SVSU General Posting Policy. Mr. Chapman noted his concerns with the university policy and with the purported unconstitutionality of such a policy. Mr. Chapman stated that the policy stifles the free expression of the student populous.

President Gilbertson noted that the SVSU General Posting Policy applies to university bulletin boards. He noted that these bulletin boards represent the university's official communications – some on behalf of student organizations and some as the university's own communications. President Gilbertson stated that the university is entitled to control its own bulletin boards. He stated that there are alternative activities and means of expression on campus for students to express their concerns. The university protects all those rights.

President Gilbertson thanked Mr. Chapman for appearing before the Board and for presenting his views in a very thoughtful way.

Sam Tilmon

Assistant Director of Career Services • August 2012

For Sam Tilmon, coming back to SVSU was about more than just finding a place to work.

"SVSU is kind of this quiet university that not a lot of people know about, but we're producing some of the biggest and best leaders around the country," Tilmon said. "That's one of the things that makes you love this job, knowing that you're working for this hidden gem where you really have the opportunity to be a part of something that's going to be great.

"It's like you've found this hidden oasis that no one else knows about, and it's your secret oasis."

Tilmon doesn't want his alma mater to remain a secret, and that's part of what drew him back. After receiving his bachelor's degree in business administration, he returned home to metro Detroit before accepting a position in Career Services and working toward a master's degree. Tilmon spends much of his time helping students find the right internship.

"When you finally get a chance to go into the actual internship and you get out there and start doing the work you've been learning in the classroom, you quickly find out that it's a lot different in practice than in theory," Tilmon said. "You get a chance to learn what it's really like to be in the field."

Finding the right student to fit an internship is one of the most daunting and fulfilling parts of Tilmon's job.

"It's definitely fun," he said. "For me, I get to help companies gain something very valuable to them: good talent. From the student's perspective, I get a chance to help shape their lives, to really get them focused on what they want out of life and hopefully achieving their career goals."

With Mike Major, director of career services, serving in the U.S. Navy Reserves and deployed to Afghanistan since last August, Tilmon and his colleagues experienced unexpected career challenges, summoning extra energy to offset Major's absence.

"We've been looking at what it is Career Services has done in the past, seeing what was good, what was bad and what was ugly. Our goal is to take all of our knowledge and experience and put it together to touch each individual student."

Connecting students and employers is what Tilmon finds most rewarding.

"There aren't too many offices that work with the counseling and advising side of students, as well as working with the public relations side of things with the community," he said. "The ability to be that medium, where I get to affect all aspects, is probably my favorite thing."

Diane Boehm

Director, Instructional Support Program & University Writing Program • September 2012

To describe Diane Boehm, your best bet might be a metaphor: she's nothing less than a human bridge.

As head of SVSU's Writing Center, Boehm spends much of any workday crossing gaps in communication — whether with the honors students she teaches, the writing tutors she leads or the faculty members she lends an editorial hand to with any number of writing projects.

It's that last one that has her sighing with relief, recently. Finishing the day before the fall semester began, Boehm helped complete a major status report for the College of Business & Management, working with Dean Jill Wetmore and associate professor of economics Kylie Goggins.

"It's a very defined kind of writing," Boehm said, "and yet you don't want to make it boring. You want to capture that sense of your institution's identity. It's almost like answering a massive essay question."

And those are just the kind of questions her tutors tackle when students visit SVSU's Writing Center. Thing is, they tackle them often. Last year, Writing Center tutors conducted 4,900 individual tutoring sessions, and of the students who came in, 97 percent rated their sessions as 'good' or 'excellent.'

"The tutors are my heroes, if you want to know the truth," Boehm said. "They're all students trying to maintain their own

GPA's, choose their majors, decide on graduate school — but they have this wonderful service heart.

"They know that without the ability to write, students aren't going to be successful in college, or in their professions." Eighty-five percent of job descriptions require good communication skills, Boehm added. "Even if you get a good first job, without writing, you're not promotable. All those skills have to be honed and developed."

It's all part of the Writing Center philosophy, she said. "Our goal is never to fix the paper. We use the paper as the instrument to build and grow the writer."

Outside the Writing Center, Boehm also teaches a course on thesis writing, and for 16 years now, she has run the summer institute for new faculty, where fresh hires learn about SVSU's personal teaching approach and get to know one another. In the end, that's just another bridge worth building. "The one thing people always comment on is the feeling," she said — "feeling as though they really belong on this campus."

Beyond SVSU, Diane is an avid gardener, and a lover of David Baldacci novels.

But as this human bridge will tell you smilingly, she wakes up every day looking forward to her work. "I'm very fortunate," she said. "I get to do what I love."

Dawn Iseler

Director of Auxiliary Operations • October 2012

If you asked Dawn Iseler about her job, she'd answer with maternal dignity that it all goes back to human needs.

Some 70 years ago, New York psychologist Abraham Maslow described a pyramid of essentials for everyday life, and set at its base things like food and shelter. As Iseler tells it today, her role here is simple: to help students establish that foundation. "Students have to have that before they can really feel comfortable in their own skin and do what they came here for."

From her office in Curtiss Hall, Iseler works as the director of auxiliary operations, recently expanded from directing the Housing Department. Her previous role — overseeing lodging on a 2,700-bed campus — grew in July to also include the partnerships with Aramark and Barnes & Noble, food services and the bookstore.

"And the doors keep knocking," she says.

That's one of the things she loves most about working at SVSU: there are always opportunities to advance, to become more. Iseler first took job as a student employee in 1996. She accepted a full-time post at SVSU as an administrative secretary in 2000, completing a B.A. in 2002 and an M.A. 2004.

Today, describing her department's work, she often mentions Residential Life, a team that plans student social events — more elements from Maslow's hierarchy. "Neither one of us can function without the other," she said. "We each have different specialties, but together, we create the whole living experience for our students."

Yet students aren't the only ones with needs. When freshmen arrive in the fall declaring their independence, some of the biggest needs come from parents. Iseler understands, though: she and her husband, Mark, have two children — William, 6, and Abigail, 4.

"I first heard the term 'helicopter mom' a few years ago," Iseler said, "and when my son started kindergarten, I think my rotors were spinning faster than anyone else's — and that was just kindergarten. So I have a deep appreciation for what these parents are going through."

Granted, not every parent feels that way. "We have some parents who laugh on the way out and say, 'They're all yours!' And then we have the moms who might need a little hug to get them on their way. And here, we do both. We make sure they know their kids are in good hands."

And those kids are not the only ones, she added. "I feel like I found a home," she said. "People often talk about Southern hospitality, but I think we really have that here."
