Provost Huntley noted that only seven percent of colleges and universities nationwide have earned this distinction. She stated that this classification provides national recognition that SVSU is dedicated to engaging with our region. She further added that this designation reflects the institutional commitment to both excellence in education and support for the region.

Emmie Busch

Coordinator of Scholarships & Development Communications
January Staff Member of the Month

Since her days as an undergraduate student here, Emmie Busch had her sights set on working at SVSU. She met that goal and has kept that dream alive for two decades now, serving since 1995 in the SVSU Foundation.

"I loved it here as a student and it became a career goal for me to work here," said Busch. "The friendliness, the family atmosphere — I came from a small high school and that really appealed to me," said the Mount Pleasant Sacred Heart Academy graduate. "I remember walking on the SVSU campus and I was like, 'This is it.'"

Her love of the campus culture translates through her day job, where she works with members of the Foundation's Board of Directors, SVSU donors and alumni, as well as other university supporters. "I really enjoy interacting with the variety of people," she said.

Her responsibilities include coordinating SVSU's online scholarship system (AcademicWorks) and the SVSU Foundation Resource Grant Program, stewarding those scholarships, and making sure donors' wishes are represented. She also writes content relating to scholarship agreements, acknowledgement letters, "and whatever type of document is needed."

"Every day is a little different," Busch said. "There's a lot of variety in the position."

She has witnessed a period of substantial growth at SVSU when enrollment numbers skyrocketed and the on-campus culture expansion. That evolution since 1995 has included her office.

"We have more events coming through the office," she said. "We're definitely handling a broader range of activities than we were back then."

In the immediate future, Busch looks forward to the launch of the online scholarship application process for the 2015-16 academic year, and working on the current cycle of the SVSU Foundation Resource Grant Program.

"We just passed the milestone of awarding $1 million in grants to programs involving SVSU students," she said. "It's an exciting program to be part of."

Away from work, Busch spends much of her time helping her mother, who suffers from Alzheimer's disease. When there is time to spare, her favorite hobby is creative writing. "I haven't been professionally published, so it's mainly for pleasure at this point."

Her third floor Wickes Hall office is distinct in its frog theme. She purchased a colorful frog poster at an SVSU poster sale years ago. That poster hangs in her office today, now surrounded by the dozens of frog toys and artworks purchased in the years since.

Her appreciation of frog collectibles isn't present at her home. Instead, it's exclusive to SVSU, a place that's become her home away from home for 20 years.

Denise Berry

Director of Military Student Affairs and Special Assistant to the Associate Provost/Dean of Students • February Staff Member of the Month

At a young age, Denise Berry knew where she belonged.

The daughter of a sergeant first class in the Massachusetts National Guard, Berry as a child often would accompany her father to the armory in her native Boston. The experience instilled in her a desire to serve her country.

"I wanted to be part of something greater than myself," she said.

So she earned a commission in the U.S. Army, serving out her career as an engineer officer before retiring with the rank of major in 2011. Berry still follows that calling today while serving as SVSU's military student affairs director.

It was a job and an office she inhabited first in May 2013, when SVSU leadership decided to provide specific services to military service members, veterans and the dependents of service members and veterans. Berry likens her office to a "one-stop shop" where military-affiliated students can go for admissions, advising and orientation, to name just a few of the services.

"We help with just about everything they need. If my team can't provide a solution, we find the person on campus that can," Berry said.

She oversaw the operation from a desk inside Student Affairs until Military Student Affairs moved into its own office in 121 Curtiss Hall in January 2014. The military student lounge was formally opened last Veterans Day. There, military-affiliated students show up to take advantage of the services while also studying and socializing with peers.

At SVSU, 379 students are currently eligible to take advantage of the office's services, and in the fall semester, more than 600 visits were logged. Berry believes that number can be increased. She spends some of her time reaching out to eligible students who have not yet stepped into the office.

Berry said she's very happy in her position — a role that found her in an almost random fashion.

When Berry retired from the military, "it was the first time in my adult life when I could decide where I wanted to live. My husband was willing to be adventurous."

With no house and no job yet secured, three years ago they decided to move to Saginaw, where her brother — David Berry, professor of kinesiology — taught at SVSU.

Within a few weeks, she earned a job as a resident director at SVSU, and a year and a half later, the Military Student Affairs position.

"It's been an overwhelming experience," she said of her latest job. "It's more than I could have hoped for and I'm very thankful for that."
