IV. INFORMATION AND DISCUSSION ITEMS

6. SVSU Cardinal Climate Survey

Dr. Mamie Thorns, Special Assistant to the President for Diversity Programs, gave an overview of the upcoming SVSU Cardinal Climate Survey, which is scheduled to begin on Tuesday, November 4, 2014. She noted that SVSU would be surveying faculty, staff and students about their experiences and perceptions of the campus and the workplace climate. More than 12,000 individuals are invited to participate in the study. Dr. Thorns stated that this study is one of SVSU's ongoing efforts to foster a healthy and inclusive environment for all members of the university community.

Dr. Thorns commented that Rankin & Associates Consulting has been contracted to conduct the climate study. She further added that Rankin & Associates is well known across the country in administering and analyzing climate surveys on university campuses. Dr. Thorns stated that the project is expected to lead to initial implementation of actions in 2016. (Appendix Six: Survey)

7. Enrollment and Retention Strategies: 2014-2015

President Bachand and Dr. Deborah Huntley, Provost and Vice President for Academic Affairs, briefed the Board on enrollment and retention strategies for 2014-2015. The following key goals and priorities were outlined for the current academic year and beyond: 1) improve academic reputation and the institution's recognition, 2) achieve enrollment stability, 3) improve student success to enhance graduation rates and shorten time to graduation, and 4) maintain fiscal stability and high quality infrastructure.

Provost Huntley noted the importance of enhancing our marketing and communication efforts. She emphasized that this effort will need to be about consistent messaging with a clear focus on our academic strengths. She emphasized the importance of getting an academic component into our recruiting and marketing initiatives.

Provost Huntley also stressed the significance of exerting leadership with Science, Technology, Engineering and Math (STEM) initiatives in the region to build SVSU's academic reputation and institutional recognition on a larger scale.

President Bachand noted there will be extra focus on the following: 1) restructuring financial aid, 2) extending our core of recruiters, 3) developing a strategic plan for online course offerings, and 4) shaping SVSU's enrollment profile. (Appendix Seven: Strategies)

Appendix One: Smith

Renea Smith

Assistant Registrar • July Staff Member of the Month

As Renea Smith's environmental footprint has shrunk, the impression she's left at SVSU has grown.

The assistant registrar's role in transitioning the university's transferable course records from a largely printed-paper process to an electronic transaction helped secure her status as a recent Staff Member of the Month. But the reduced reliance on paper for her office's operations isn't the only factor that played a part in the honor, says the man who nominated her.

"She's been an excellent assistant to me — a real problemsolver since I've been here," said Cliff Dorne, who became registrar last year after serving in a number of other roles at the university.

Dorne praised her ingenuity when faced with new, unfamiliar obstacles. "She's always open to creative solutions to protocols and processes in the office," he added.

Those protocols and processes were much different in 2006 when Smith was hired as assistant registrar.

Her responsibilities from the beginning largely dealt with managing records for the school's transferable courses. It's a task that involves evaluating transcripts as well as communicating both with officials at SVSU and partnering higher education institutions regarding those transfer agreements.

"Everything was paper formatted back then," Smith said of her early years at SVSU. "When I first arrived, I would print out paper right from the course catalogue. Then we moved to email."

Now she's helping oversee a deeper digital transition to a computerized curriculum management program known as Curriculog.

The Birch Run native hopes the update gives SVSU another advantage in its pursuit of building enrollment figures.

"Our transfer student population is and will be important to this school," Smith said. "There's a lot of competition with (enrollment) numbers being so tight, so we have to make this readily available to our transfer students. You're talking about thousands of courses from all these different schools."

She called the work "challenging."

"But I like a challenge. I learn something new every day. Whenever you think you know everything there is to know, something new comes out. I just love that about the higher ed environment."

Appendix Two: Woiderski

Cynthia Woiderski

Director of Disability Services • August Staff Member of the Month

Satisfaction is a screensaver in Cynthia Woiderski's office. For 21 years, she's overseen SVSU's Disability Services office, where she and her supporting staff have helped students remove both physical and academic obstacles that once made their educational goals more difficult to achieve. Her tenure has overlapped with substantial advances in how the world — SVSU included — supports students with disabilities.

In short, Woiderski and her office have been busy changing a lot of lives for the better.

Still, it's something as simple as a series of screensaver photos that sometimes proves to be payoff enough for Woiderski. When her computer sits idle long enough, images of students she's supported over the years begin to float across the screen. She smiles, taking a moment to watch the show, as if she's seeing it for the first time.

"That's the best part of my job," she says. "I get to work with these students." Many of the photos, she explains, were snapped during commencement ceremonies. "That's my favorite day of the year," she says. "After knowing how hard they've worked for years, you get to see them graduate. That's always a happy time for me."

Woiderski won't accept sole credit for her office's work. She's quick to thank faculty, staff and administration for their role in the campus makeovers made for students with disabilities during her tenure.

"The administration has always said that, 'Legally, [SVSU] doesn't have to do this — but what's best for the students? Let's do that.' I like that."

Much has changed since she arrived at SVSU in 1993. For starters, her first lot of students with disabilities numbered 23. Today, that figure is 250. When she started, students would register and sometimes wait two to three weeks before receiving some of the accommodations necessary to give them equal footing with their classroom peers. Now, she says, students are accommodated "right from day one."

Some of the changes she's overseen include more handicapaccessible doorways, the inclusion of captions on campus-produced videos, and new accessibility standards on all SVSU technology purchases. In recent years, her office also has helped students with disabilities receive the benefits from a donor-funded grant that pays for assistive technology. "It's been more of a gradual change," she says of the many initiatives implemented over 21 years.

But the work has been worth it, she says, especially when some of the smiles she sees on her screensaver return to remind her of the office's impact on their lives.

"There are a few that come back [after graduation]," Woiderski says of former students.

"They want to tell me where they've been, where they've been working. I always have a big hug for them."

Appendix Three: Leyrer

Jaime Leyrer

Special Assistant to the Dean • September Staff Member of the Month

Jaime Leyrer was raised on SVSU. Literally.

Before she even began her first day of grade school, the Saginaw native was a regular at the university, where she attended the campus' now-defunct daycare center while her mother pursued a social work degree in the early 1990s.

Not many memories remain from those earliest experiences — other than the trouble Leyrer made for herself one day when she and another daycare attendee decided to grab a pair of scissors and chop off each other's hair.

These days, Leyrer's locks are long again, and she's back at SVSU, albeit this time in a position within the College of Business & Management. After working for more than a year in Career Services, she moved into her current role as special assistant to the dean in July 2013.

"It's been a whirlwind of a year," the September Staff Member of the Month said, "I love it."

Each day brings a new challenge, and that wide range of responsibilities is what makes her job exciting on a daily basis, she said. She deals a lot with social media and marketing. Her favorite duty, though, involves advising students attending the College of Business & Management.

"What I love most about it is being able to work with students, being able to show them the next few years of their life, and putting together their academic plan," she said. "A lot of times, they're floored and shocked that they can (graduate) in four years. I've had students come in and cry because they were so happy about that."

After only a year in the role, she's seen the payoff to providing students guidance.

"I had one student last year — every time he came in, he hung his head because he felt bad he was coming in again, asking for help," Leyrer said. "He did graduate this year and then invited me to his graduation party. That was the cherry on top of the cake when he introduced me to his family."

The Saginaw native is a true believer in the college. She helped recruit her sister, who is now working on an accounting degree.

Leyrer said, for her second year on the job, she's hoping to ramp up the college's social media reach.

"It's very important to engage with students and alumni," she said. "Social media is going to be a big priority of mine, of the college."

Leyrer also assisted with marketing for the Global Business Sustainability Conference the college hosted Sept. 23-26.

"It's going to be another one of those years where we're going to have a lot going on," she said. "I'm looking forward to it."
